Half of the world’s population is under the age of 25. Research that includes the perspectives of young people is critically important - whether the topic is what kind of city we want to live in or how to successfully transition to employment.

Come check out UVic’s Centre for Youth and Society’s interactive display on creative and playful ways of engaging young people in an array of research topics.